Methodology

The LMG Life Sciences Awards gives law firms and professional services firms the recognition they deserve for their efforts in the advancement of law in the life sciences industry. The awards are split into practitioner, firm, and case/deal categories.

Law firms, private practitioners and in-house counsel teams are invited to make nominations detailing their accomplishments in the life sciences industry within our list of practice specialisms (see below).

The awards will also recognise a series of impact cases and deals.

We have created an easy-to-use online submissions portal for law firms and in-house counsel to submit their work. The portals can be used to make as many nominations in as many categories as appropriate.

A dedicated research team will evaluate the written entries and conduct a series of interviews with leading practitioners and in-house counsel in the market across multiple areas of law and jurisdictions. Direct nominations form a vital part of the awards research process and the best way of highlighting your work. The research team will also review external sources of information, such as research generated by its supporting brands.

Deadline

All nominations must be input to the portal by January 25 2024.

Judging process

Final decisions will be made by the LMG Life Sciences awards team following an extensive research process. Decisions are entirely independent.

Impact case winners are adjudged on their impact within the legal practices of the life sciences. The panel will also take into consideration legal complexity, innovation, and other relevant challenges in assessing cases.

Firm and individual winners are adjudged on their professional accomplishments within their field between January 1 to December 31 of the preceding year.
